the 1980sQ: What is the difference between these two ways of trying to express the number of paths in a tree? In Chapter 2, "Walk around a tree", on pg. 27-28 of Introduction to Algorithms, there is a way of counting the number of paths that goes like this: I heard someone say this was a shortcut to counting the number of paths from a start node to a terminal node. So I thought there might be a shortcut too, so I tried this: I was expecting the number of paths to be same, but it didn't turn out to be. Here is my question: why? Can someone explain me the logic behind this (if you can): A: The difference between the two definitions (and the given one) is that the given one is a recursive definition while the other two are not recursive. If I try to get the recursive definition from the non-recursive one, I will end up with $$\text{number of paths in a rooted tree rooted in node } x = 1 + \text{number of paths in a tree rooted in node } x$$

 Which is different than the recursive definition.

Blood tests showed an elevated BNP level, pulmonary hypertension and a wide electrocardiographic QRS complex, suggestive of cardiac amyloidosis. Two-dimensional echocardiography revealed a mass in the left ventricular free wall, causing severe ventricular dysfunction and moderate mitral regurgitation. The
