What's New in the PDF To Editable DOC OCR Converter?

VeryPDF's PDF to Editable DOC OCR Converter software uses Optical Character Recognition technologies to convert scanned PDF documents and images into text documents. It supports character languages such as English, German, Japanese, Italian, and many others. The PDF to Editable DOC OCR Converter is available in two formats, as a Command Line utility application that runs on Windows operating systems, and as a very easy-to-use Desktop Application, available for Windows, Linux, Mac OS, and other operating systems. The command line utility application uses fairly common command line options and is useful for running the application from a command line on a Windows system. But the desktop application is a full featured Graphic User Interface application that will work with a variety of operating systems. The application uses the same libraries of optical character recognition services as the desktop application, so the results are fairly consistent, as well as very easy to use. Just follow the simple command line steps to convert PDF files into the desired text format. The command line options for the PDF to Editable DOC OCR Converter software are explained on a regular line by line basis. But the Desktop version of the software provides a very detailed User Interface, allowing users to select their text language for conversion, as well as specifying the number of words that can be found in each page of a document being converted.
