A volcano in Indonesia has erupted for the first time in decades, exploding with a column of ash and gas up to three miles into the sky and billowing smoke across the border in East Timor. More than 600 people have evacuated their homes and flights have been canceled after Mount Karangetang's eruption began early Saturday, national disaster agency spokesman Sutopo Purwo Nugroho said. Nugroho said there was no sign of any landslide that would have triggered the eruption, but there was a small flood of water, possibly being blocked by an ice and rock dam that formed above the volcano. Nugroho said there was no immediate danger to nearby communities, but that the government was putting extra police and military forces on alert. Officials in East Timor, a former Portuguese territory, reported tremors in the wake of the eruption, but the extent and impact of the eruption there weren't immediately known. Mount Karangetang rises about 7,100 feet (2,200 meters) above sea level in the Selat Mountains. It has a history of eruptions, with the last large eruption, in 1963, lasting for weeks. Indonesia sits on the so-called Pacific Ring of Fire and has numerous active volcanoes.Newatv Newatv 6d1f23a050
